“LIFE’S SHORT, GET A DIVORCE” ATTORNEY
CORRI FETMAN BARES ALL FOR PLAYBOY.COM
“Lawyer of Love” Feature to Include Ongoing Column on Love and the Law

CHICAGO, Friday, January 11, 2008—After stirring up controversy with a billboard for her law firm that featured sexy male and female bodies and the slogan “Life’s Short, Get a Divorce,” Chicago attorney Corri Fetman is taking it all off—and writing an exclusive “Lawyer of Love” online column featuring her legal take on love—for Playboy.com (to view Corri’s Lawyer of Love pictorial and column, visit www.playboy.com/corri beginning Friday, January 11).

The racy billboard raised eyebrows across the world this past summer and Corri, a partner at Fetman, Garland & Associates, was accused of promoting divorce. The provocative attorney begs to differ. “We believe you shouldn’t stay in an unhappy marriage,” she says. The law firm followed up with another steamy mobile billboard in June 2007 and just released the third ad in the ongoing campaign entitled “Take Control, Get A Divorce” this week. This ad can be seen inside the Lawyer of Love feature on Playboy.com.

In her “Lawyer of Love” column written exclusively for Playboy.com, Corri weighs in on many of the most frequently asked questions about love and the law. She will also field e-mail questions submitted by readers about the legal side of love that will be answered in future columns. Playboy.com will also offer an exclusive and provocative nude pictorial of Corri.

In Playboy magazine’s February 2008 issue (on newsstands Friday, January 11) Corri reveals the naked truth behind the infamous billboards—a secret that never came out, despite coverage by CNN, Good Morning America, MSNBC, FOX and hundreds of other news outlets. The sexy female in the ads is none other than Corri herself.

She also is featured as the magazine’s February 2008 “Boss of the Month.”
